"Neutrality."

Were it not for the criminal tergiversation of our foreign "cousins" in their professions of neutrality as regards the pending conflict between right and wrong—between order and chaos—now occupying the attention alike of the friends and enemies of humanity and progress, were not the results of too serious and important a nature to admit of an indulgence in levity, ridicule and excess of derision only could be provoked by the canting hypocrisy of those, who for the sordid gain they hope to realize from its continuance, and the national superiority they may secure and retain if per adventure the wrong can defeat the right, secretly lend every description of aid at their disposal in favor of what for years they have denounced as debasing, criminal, and unworthy a civilized and professedly Christian nation England and France, by their protestations, are not only strictly neutral in the great conflict which now brings mourning to so many homes in our land, but they are opposed—first, to the principle of revolt by any portion of the governed, and second, to the institution which instigated this revolt Victor Hugo has given us an account of the course pursued by French rulers toward the citizen participants in revolution, and every American-born child is or should be familiar with the Christian English treatment of revolting Sepoys. The interests of our neutral neighbors, however, interfere seriously with the workings of their principle when the stability of our Union is involved Their policy is to weaken and if possible destroy our Government, because a protracted existence and clear demonstration of the true principle upon which it is established endangers the permanence of monarchical institutions, and its continuity would soon place it in point of influence so far in advance of old world dynasties, that they must vacate their empirage, no more to stand the arbiters of war and dictators of peace among the neighboring and weaker powers.

At the outbreak of the rebellion, notwithstanding their protestations to the contrary, these pirates and pirate protectors were secretly engaged in supplying the South with all the ships and munitions of war, clothing, provisions, etc, needed over and above what had been through a succession of Democratic administrations systematically stolen by the perjured panderers to rebellion. The leading shipbuilders of the two powers have flourished and waxed rich upon the blood money of pirates, with the knowledge and connivance of the "officials" set to guard against an infraction of the neutrality proclamations The national war ships of England have discharged in southern ports their armaments, exchanging them for rebel cotton, under color of privileges not granted to blockade runners in general The neutral ground of Mexico has been used as a depot for the landing of British cargoes, which have been escorted and protected to the rebel lines by French troops Our Government is in receipt of information that large amounts of warlike and other stores are constantly arriving, and that the French military authorities are protecting them through From such "neutrality" may we be delivered History records no parallel of dishonor from which the mercenary empires over the water could have taken a cue

Prosperous.—Salem is in a prosperous condition The stone foundation of a new University building is now completed, one kiln of the bricks burned, and the corner stone will be laid to day The District School House is being refitted and is just enclosed in a neat fence A new and competent teacher is about to be engaged The Mansion House on State street, is being raised another story and repaired and refitted generally The Statesman says that within a month Salem will be better supplied with Hotel accommodations than ever before

What the Copperheads are Doing.—The St Louis correspondent of the S F Morning Call, in alluding to the arrest of the Belgian Consul, Chas L Hurst, a prominent and wealthy citizen of St Louis, says

A short time before his arrest for good and sufficient cause the military authority had the temerity to revoke Mr Hurst's exequatur and the Secesh sympathizers are all astir at the turn affairs have taken. In order to understand the importance of Hurst's arrest, it may be proper to state that a few weeks ago he paid a visit to Vallandigham at Windsor, and that at the time there was a meeting there of the new order known as the American Knights, an organization made out of the shattered materials of the Knights of the Golden Circle and of which Vallandigham is the Grand Commander The rebel General Price is the Grand Mogul of the American Knights, and a regular chain of communication is formed between the rebel army and the North through the medium of [illegible] amnesty proclamations, and [illegible] devoted to the cause of the South It is reported that Hurst is, and has been the financial agent of the rebels in Missouri and that all the schemes of Price & Co in this portion of the State were conducted by him Since the arrest of Hurst information has been obtained which leads to the belief that the Order of American Knights is of National existence and numerically a powerful organization It is said to number in Missouri 20 000 Illinois 150 000 nearly 100 000 of whom are armed Ohio 100 000 [illegible] 000 armed Kentucky 70 000 [illegible] of whom are armed The States of New Jersey New York and Pennsylvania are [illegible] and the work of organization is said to be rapidly going on in Michigan Iowa Wisconsin and other Western States [illegible] the design of the American Knights to convey Vallandigham to some [illegible] July, and [illegible] nominating him for the Presidency [illegible] will cause a [illegible] to North and help to turn the scales in favor of the South Whether the Consul d Belge is as deeply involved [illegible] of the Vallandighamites [illegible] sufficiently [illegible] by the military, who hold him [illegible] refuse to release him on [illegible] any communication [illegible] the existence of some [illegible] ter of the Knights [illegible] ber of prominent [illegible] in [illegible] forts to gain information [illegible] tion has not as yet been [illegible]

What Shall we Do?—We feel like sitting down in dismay, and giving up the ghost, as we contemplate the duties before us and consider the dangerous state of the weather Thermometer at 102° to 125° and a column of Local items to pick up, when we have [illegible] the appetite of a craving after town gossip Have mercy on us!—not a breath of air is stirring and we appeal to a physician for advice as to how we shall proceed to "keep cool," prevent our flesh from melting and avoid sickness From mercenary motives the said physician peremptorily declines to inform us for fear we want the information for an item Without a word we retire to the sanctum and meditate over the cool breezes which our neighbors in the mountains must be enjoying, the freedom of the miner, and the health giving comforts of his cabin home, when suddenly the peal of the fire bell roused our lagging fainting energy, as if according to the doctrine of Benj Franklin, a fire would stir up the atmosphere and create a breeze, and with one swoop we join the human cavalcade making a horse of ourself on No Two's machine running at our utmost speed, up First street, until stopped by the Foreman the fire being [illegible], as usual We had by this time been fully aroused and after wiping the perspiration from our forehead, we proceeded with the usual canvass of the city an every day event with us

The Fire.—The fire yesterday was the most singular event of the season which has occurred, although it was the natural result of a long chain of peculiar circumstances A miner starts from the mountains on his Cayuse, "homeward bound, and among the articles in his cantenas is a small can of powder to be used in case of an emergency when Mr Snake Indian or some other man should attempt to "take his napper," and despoil him of his treasure The miner reached Portland [illegible] and the Cayuse is put into a stable, on Salmon street but before entering he manages to step on the aforesaid can of powder, which is carelessly dropped into the street from the cantenas and which, being now considered worthless, is left to waste A farmer comes to town with a load of hay, which he offers to barter in front of the same stable Shortly the trade is postponed, when the farmer proceeds somewhere else with his load but is fearfully checked, for as the wheel rolls over [illegible] the [illegible] stone, a spark ignites the said powder and one flash is enough to fire the load of hay The alarm is given and the whole department of Portland turns out, but before a machine arrived at the spot the horses are taken from the burning pile and wagon and all are sent into the river in front of the Court House, where the enraged owner was employing the best means possible to save his vehicle, when we arrived at the scene of the disaster, and made the inquiries

A Flood.—The floods came on Monday evening, and descending upon Charles Barrett's Book Store, on Washington street, nearly washed him out of it, before morning The cause of the disaster was the high pressure of water flowing through supply pipes which burst The event had a tendency to draw a crowd to his store during yesterday, but whether it was to look at the results of the accident, or examine the superior and extensive lot of books Stationery, etc, kept for sale, we are not well enough posted to say most likely however it was the latter, for the stock has superior attractions The papers, periodicals etc in which Mr Barrett greatly interests himself—and his customers—are kept at another store on Front street, next to Lind's Exchange where he will be pleased to wait upon all who may favor him with their patronage

Much ado about Nothing.—Muggins says we are endeavoring to raise a "big fuss about nothing," and to prove what he asserts he argues that there is nothing real in half the quartz we see and speak of Further, Muggins would have us believe that the specimens now on exhibition in this city from the Santiam mines, are manufactured specimens, "got up for the purpose of deceiving honest persons We admit that they were manufactured, but we positively believe old Vulcan's forges did the work What they were "got up for" we leave to the good judgment of our citizens In reply to how many feet we own, we assure Muggins it is our province to control but two, at the present time, and to part with either of them would be a sad misfortune, and much impair the progress of Local items.

Another Runaway.—Yesterday a team belonging to Bennett & Quimby, of this city and driven by Mr Henry Rosenfeld, was frightened by an accident to the harness, that forced the carriage to which they were attached up on their heels, and ran away The vehicle was upset just above the Front street bridge where Mr R and his lady companion narrowly escaped a precipitous fall of some forty feet into the canyon below The horses kept on down Front street, and fetched up rather abruptly between Salmon and Taylor streets, by parting astride a wagon loaded with flour when one of them fell, and they were captured We understand Mr Rosenfeld was severely injured by the fall he received, but the lady escaped uninjured

Rather Summary.—A case of fright occurred in this city yesterday during which rather an unjustifiable and summary proceeding was instituted to change the habitation of an invalid lady We understand she was placed upon a dray carted several blocks and unloaded in a very inordinate manner at a house where she was only partly acquainted and not entitled to share its hospitalities any more than at the house from which she had been taken Physicians were called who pronounced the disease chicken pox, and the patient, being in indigent circumstances, will be taken care of by the authorities

Sent to Vancouver.—The Sanitary Rooster, which has created such a furore among greenbacks in this city, for ten days past, was sent to the ladies Sanitary Aid Society, in Vancouver yesterday, by the steamer Vancouver The rooster was last won in Portland by Mr Richard King, of the Pioneer Exchange who re donated it to the juvenile partners Theodore and Henry Mansfield and they forward it as above

Very Hot Indeed.—We are unable to ascertain, from mine host, the oldest inhabitant, McCormick's Almanac, or through any other medium when Portland was ever visited with hotter weather than that of yesterday Plants would even droop in the shade and one of our neighbors placed his thermometer in the sun, when the mercury rose to 145° at 3 o clock P M It was very hot, indeed

After Owyhee Bricks.—Our fellow townsman Lloyd Brooks, Esq left for the Owyhee country yesterday morning making his second trip for the present season He goes this time for a "cart load of bricks," which will be of a different material than what is used every day in constructing our buildings the worth of which, however may be the means of erecting several buildings We wish Mr B a pleasant journey

Delinquent Tax Notice.—Sheriff Stitzel advertises this morning that the delinquent tax list for the county of Multnomah, for 1863 has been placed in his hands for collection The time allowed delinquents to make their accounts good, will expire on the 10th of August

Ladies' Sanitary Fair.—The ladies Sanitary Aid Society of this city propose to hold a Fair at the Baptist Church on Friday evening next, for the purpose of raising funds for the Sanitary Commission See notice in another column

Internal Revenue.—We learn that Capt Malcolm Crawford has accepted the position of Internal Revenue Collectorship and appoints Levi Anderson, Esq of this city, as his deputy The office will remain as heretofore in Portland under the new regime

Found.—A large brass key was picked up in front of the Eagle Bakery, on First street last evening which the owner can have, upon proving property, and paying for this notice Apply at this office

Repairs.—The carpenters are busy in making some needed repairs at Couch's wharf When completed the southern part will be as substantial as any part of that extensive commercial locality

WHAT SHALL WE DO?—We feel like sitting down in dismay, and giving up hope as we contemplate the duties before us and consider the languorous state of the weather. Thermometer at 102° to 145° and a column of L nabilities to pick up, where with to satisfy the appetite of a ravenous gossip. Have mercy on us—in a real of air is stirring, and we appeal to the public for advice as to how we shall proceed to prevent our flesh from melting. A favorite sickness. [illegible] ceuntry not yet [illegible] for capture [illegible] declines to inform us for [illegible] for "an item" [illegible] sanctum, and [illegible] our neighbors [illegible] the freedom of the [illegible] comforts of his [illegible] of the fire [illegible] as if according to the [illegible] of Ben Franklin a fire would stir up the atmosphere and create a breeze and with one we [illegible] the human [illegible] making a horse of ourselves [illegible] running at our utmost speed up First street until stopped by the fireman too frolong. [illegible] We had by this time been fully aroused and after wiping the perspiration from our brows, we proceeded with the usual canvass of the city on every day event with us.

THE FIRE.—The fire yesterday was the most singular event of the season which has occurred although it was the natural result of a long chain of peculiar circumstances. A miner starts from the mountains on his Cayuse homeward bound and among the articles in his cantinas is a small can of powder to be used in case of an emergency when Mr Snake Indian [illegible] attempt to take his napper and lest of him of his treasure. The miner reached Portland [illegible] and the Cayuse is put into a stable, on [illegible] street, but before entering he manages to step on the aforesaid can of powder which is carelessly dropped into the street from the cantinas and which being now considered worthless is left to waste. A farmer comes to town with a load of hay, which he offers to barter in front of the same stable. Shortly the trade is postponed when the farmer proceeds some where else with his load but is fearfully checked for as the wheel rolls over a small cobble stone a spark ignites the scattered powder and the flash is enough to fire the load of hay. The alarm is given and the whole department of Portland turns out but before a machine arrived at the spot the horses are taken from the burning pile and wagon and all are sent into the river in front of the Court House where the enraged owner was employing the best means possible to save his vehicle when we arrived at the scene of the disaster, and made the [illegible]

A FLOOD.—The flood came on Monday evening and descending upon Charles Barrett's Book Store on Washington street nearly washed it from its place ere morning. The cause of the disaster was the high pressure of water flowing through supply pipes which burst. The event has [illegible] to draw a crowd to his store during yesterday, but whether it was to look at the results of the accident or examine the superior and extensive lot of books stationery, etc kept for sale, we are not well enough posted to say, most likely however it was the latter, for the stock has superior attractions. The papers periodicals, etc, in which Mr Barrett greatly interests himself—and his customers—are kept at another store on Front street near the Land Exchange where he will be pleased to wait upon all who may favor him with their patronage.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.—Muggins says we are endeavoring to raise a "big fuss about nothing," and to prove what he asserts he argues that there is nothing real in half the quartz we see and speak of. Further, Muggins would have us believe that the specimens now on exhibition in this city from the Santiam mines, are manufactured specimens "got up for the purpose of deceiving honest persons." We admit that they were manufactured but we positively believe old Vulcan's forges did the work. What they were "got up for" we leave to the good judgment of our citizens. In reply to how many feet we own, we assure Muggins it is our province to control but two, at the present time, and to part with either of them would be a sad misfortune, and much impair the progress of Locksiltons.

ANOTHER RUNAWAY.—Yesterday a team belonging to Bennett & Quimby, of this city, and driven by Mr. Henry Rosebfeld, was frightened by an accident to the harness, that forced the carriage to which they were attached, upon their heels and ran away. The vehicle was upset just above the Front street bridge where Mr. R and his lady companion narrowly escaped a precipitous fall of some forty feet, into the canyon below. The horses kept on down Front street, and fetched up rather abruptly between Salmon and Taylor streets by [illegible] astride a wagon loaded with flour when one of them fell, and they were captured. We understand Mr Rosenfeld was severely injured by the fall he received, but the lady escaped uninjured.

RATHER SUMMARY.—A case of fright occurred in the city yesterday, during which rather an unjustifiable and summary proceeding was instituted to change the habitation of an invalid lady. We understand she was placed upon a dray carted several blocks, and unloaded in a very inordinate manner at a house where she was only partly acquainted and not entitled to share its hospitalities any more than at the house from which she had been taken. Physicians were called who pronounced the disease chicken pox, and the patient, being an indigent circumstances, will be taken care of by the authorities.

SENT TO VANCOUVER.—The Sanitary Rooster which has created such a furore among greenbacks in this city, for ten days past, was sent to the Ladies Sanitary Aid Society, in Vancouver yesterday, by the steamer Vancouver. The rooster was last won in Portland by Mr Richard King of the Pioneer Exchange, who re-donated it to the juvenile partners Theodore and Henry Mansfield, and they forward it as above.

VERY HOT, INDEED.—We are unable to ascertain, from mine host the oldest inhabitant M'C [illegible] Almanac, or through any other medium when Portland was ever visited with hotter weather than that of yesterday. Plants would even droop in the shade and one of our neighbors placed his thermometer in the sun when the mercury rose to 145° at 3 o'clock P M. It was very hot, indeed.

AFTER OWYHEE BRICKS.—Our fellow townsman Lloyd Brooks, Esq, left for the Owyhee country yesterday morning making his second trip for the present season. He goes this time for a cart load of bricks which will be of a different material than what is used every day in constructing buildings the worth of which, however may be the means of erecting several buildings. We wish Mr B a pleasant journey.

DELINQUENT TAX NOTICE.—Sheriff Stitzel advertises this morning that the delinquent tax list for the county of Multnomah for 1863 has been placed in his hands for collection. The time allowed delinquents to make their accounts good, will expire on the 16th of August.

LADIES' SANITARY FAIR.—The ladies Sanitary Aid Society of this city propose to hold a Fair at the Baptist Church on Friday evening next for the purpose of raising funds for the Sanitary Commission. See notice in another column.

INTERNAL REVENUE.—We learn that Capt Medorem Crawford has accepted the position of Internal Revenue Collectorship, and appoints [illegible] Esq, of this city, as his deputy. The office will remain as heretofore in Portland under the new regime.

FOUND.—A large brass key was picked up in front of the Eagle Bakery, on First street last evening, which the owner can have upon proving property and paying for this notice. Apply at this office.

Ann Kensett's Mr Pitch

Miss Kensett was a [illegible] lady of fifty—brief, dark [illegible] with [illegible] little eyes [illegible] with a nose [illegible] so by a habit she had of turning [illegible] everything which did not precisely [illegible] her own [illegible] ideas. She [illegible] herself first and best, her wardrobe [illegible] and unconquerable will [illegible]

Miss Kensett went [illegible] the country to spend the summer [illegible] sister, and the [illegible] sprightly [illegible] and ten or [illegible] been [illegible] her sight [illegible] masculine [illegible] her sister [illegible] eting his dilapidated [illegible] ly, [illegible] on him, [illegible]

"You live [illegible] Mr Pitch [illegible]?"

"Yes'm, granny left [illegible] this barn', and sometimes I think I [illegible] arter"

"I should want [illegible] if I had to wear such a shirt as that—I say I should want to," observed Miss Kensett sharply

He was a little deaf and did not quite understand, but he ventured

"Yes'm"

"Have you nobody to fix up your clothes, and [illegible]?"

"My grand darter Lucindy lives with me, but she's young and ain't [illegible] at [illegible] hand"

"Well, I'm a patching hand. I think it elegant to patch! I'd like to see a nice pile of men's clothes all clean and mended up. It's magnificent. If you'll bring your clothes here I'll have them washed, and then mend them with my own hands"

After Mr Pitch fully comprehended this gracious offer he overwhelmed her with thanks, and offered remuneration, to all of which she replied that to see a clean decent looking man in this nasty, outlandish place would be sufficient reward. And so Mr Pitch brought his clothes. In due process of time they were rejuvenated, and himself inclosed after which Miss Kensett contemplated him in a sort of ecstacy

"Do look at the dear old man! Isn't he nice looking? I say—isn't he elegant—splendid? Don't his shirt look magnificent?"

In the overflowing kindness of her heart she did it, without a thought of exciting remark—only that every one would admire him as she did, but in this she found herself mistaken. Her roguish niece invariably called to her as he passed

"Ann Kensett, there goes your Mr Pitch!" And then gravely accused her of stealing his mature affections all under the thin and flimsy pretext of patching!

The gentleman himself was, like all his sex, extremely susceptible to kindness, and had of late acquired the habit of saying "Your most 'bedient ma'am, till death parts us." "Thank ye till ye'r better paid." The words were a little significant, but Miss Kensett was difficult to move; they troubled her not. Even when, finally, Mr Pitch switched smartly by with sun flowers and marigolds in his buttonhole, she sewed on in blissful unconsciousness, of the feelings her patching had stirred

One hazy, languid August evening, Mr Pitch came in, evidently got up for [illegible] an extra occasion

A lengthy, aged, swallow tailed coat was one of his adornments, all creased and covered with lint and down it was, too, whereupon, Miss Kensett's eyes were fastened upon it at once

"You must bring that coat here, next time and have it brushed. It's a sight to behold!" she exclaimed

"Never been teched sence granny left me she used to air it reg'lar, thank ye kindly till ye'r better paid"

"How is it with your stockings?" asked Miss Kensett, disdaining the allusion to "granny" as she always did. "I do like to see a man with nice clean stockings on his feet, you must have Lucindy knit some for you"

"Lucindy ain't no knittin' hand, seems to me sometimes as if I feel the need of a pardner"

"Nonsense," interrupted Miss Kensett, "an old fool like you had better think of something else. I'll see to you while I stay, and you'll not live long after that; dirt will soon kill anybody after they've been kept clean awhile"

"It's a barmy evening," was the somewhat irrelevant remark; "clear as a glass bottle"

"Elegant!" replied Miss Kensett, "have you got your toes through those stockings you put on the other day? If you have you'd better leave them for I'd as lief your rags should flutter from your head as your heels. Rags is rags, even if they are out of sight"

"Anna," said Mr Pitch winking at her, (he had heard her sister call her Ann, and he somehow wanted to come very near to night,) "my stockin's is hull, and my shirt is hull, and my trowsis is hull, many thanks till you're better paid! It's my vittals is the matter now"

"My good laws! can't Lucinda cook for you?" interrupted Miss Kensett

"Lucindy ain't no cookin' hand; the little thing ain't much of a hand at anything. I'm alone in the world, Ann, and so am I! I've known what it was to hev one good woman, I airnestly feel the want of another. I hev pork in the cellar and pigs to kill and its so lonesome in t'other room, now granny ain't there. I have always been reck'ned a good provider. If you choose tew come with me, Ann who shall rebel again? We're both of age!" he concluded with a dry chuckle

"My good laws!" exclaimed the petrified spinster

"Hev you no wish for a pardner? Do you mean to live and die single?" he meekly asked, very much flattered and scared at her small indignant eyes

"I don't think I shall be yoked with Methuselah at all events! Pigs to kill! Good provider! Mercy! mercy!" muttered Miss Kensett, her voice for once failing her

"Pigs to kill," continued Mr Pitch uneasily, "and wood drug up afore the door, a barrel of white flour and plenty of Injun, and it looks so lonesome in t'other room, now granny ain't there"

"Mercy! mercy!" again muttered Miss Kensett, rolling her eyes around at her pink wrapper and tossing her hand over her thinly covered [illegible]

"My good laws!"

"Sartainly," he responded in a mild conciliatory way, "you're younger than I am and sprayer, and older [illegible] I s'pose. But I thought it would be no harm to ax ye if ye was a mind to jine. We're both alone like and I'm [illegible] no cookin' hand and it looks so lonesome in—"

"Stop your mouth!" piped Miss Kensett. "Don't say that again in my presence—[illegible] you dare," she threatened, her voice trembling

"I will just say," [illegible] said the poor man rising, scared out of his wits, "I [illegible] you were so tew [illegible]. I hadn't the fairest idea of fooling, [illegible]. I thought bein' I had pork in the cellar and pigs [illegible] and Lucindy—"

"Get out of my house this instant!" fiercely interrupted Miss Kensett. "Never [illegible] it. There it is [illegible] 'Now clear out with your old bones, and don't you set your old foot in [illegible] here [illegible] your funeral, [illegible]

By this time the [illegible] was out of hearing. [illegible]

A while [illegible] Mr Pitch [illegible] without [illegible] the pillow [illegible] then [illegible] them on [illegible]

"You won't [illegible] much for they will come [illegible] It's my way I have [illegible]

"I'm more than [illegible] you Ann, and I'm willing to pay you well, if you'll only accept one [illegible]"

"I [illegible] I was rewarded [illegible] go by my word [illegible] Miss Kensett [illegible]"

"Well [illegible] and I'll trouble ye no more with my duds. I've come around [illegible] all your hands [illegible] spite energy

"Why, I've told you it's no trouble. I like to work for the men; they look so elegant when they are all [illegible]"

"Wall [illegible] Ann, it don't seem exactly right for you to be doing my patchin', when there's a woman to hum doin' nothin'"

"You've been fidgeting and fidgeting about ever since you came in now, if you've got anything to say, out with it," said Miss Kensett, sharply

"Really, Ann, I wouldn't hev you think for the world it was any disrespect to you! I gave you the first chance, but we're all of us changeable, [illegible] critters, unless we're yoked in couples, and the smartest one [illegible] they seem to travel more steady like, eh?"

"Ellen," queried Miss Kensett, snapping her eyes at her sister, "can you make head or tail of what he says? He's crazy."

Mr Pitch rose, moved his chair nearer the door, and seating his sparse mortality on the extreme edge, winked deprecatingly at the spotless maiden

"Wall, if you please, Ann, if its all the same tew you, I'll take my things"

Miss Kensett brought them out on her outspread hands, her eyes resting on them lovingly folded as they were in a marvelous way known only to herself

"They are all here except the collars I'm finishing. You can drop in any time after them"

"Oh never mind, Ann," was the uneasy reply, "she can do it; She requested me to fetch 'em all every rag, she said tew, if there was any little pieces and such, in per ticklar I was to fetch 'em"

"Mr Pitch," asked Mrs Temple, eyeing him gravely, "what have you been doing? Not getting married surely?"

"I may as well tell on't fust as last I s'pose. I was actilly jined, I dew expect, yesterday"

"Mercy be good to us!" exclaimed Miss Kensett, sinking into a chair

"Who in the world is it?" queried Mrs Temple

"Yes'm it was Miss Cripp that was; she's my pardner now, sartin and likely as a cricket, tuck the whole concern off my hands out doors and in, [illegible] Lucindy and bowed into the work all sorts, quick as we got hum. Said how that I was to bring every rag. Hope there'll be no hard feelin's Ann. Allers he set store by ye—allers shall but Miss Cripp is a woman—used to hev her own way—not easy tew handle like"

"I hope in my heart she'll poison you!" interrupted Miss Kensett between her set teeth. "An old Jezebel of a widow!"

"The widow Cripp that was," observed Mr Pitch, abstractedly picking at his mitten

"Well, I knew who it was," screamed Miss Kensett, "you ungrateful old fool!—me fixing and fussing for that creature to have the benefit of. I could tear every rag off you"

"Why Ann," said he rising and opening the door, his eyes as big as saucers, "I axed you fust. I hadn't no idee of your taking on so"

"Take your bundle and start. Stop a minute!" said [illegible] him and grabbing it. She twisted the neatly ironed shirts into every possible shape, she threw them on the floor, and seated herself on them more forcibly than gracefully and finally wadded them into a bunch and threw them at him

Her sister [illegible] and taking the [illegible] by the shoulder endeavored to lead her away

"Let me be!" she jerked out. "I can manage my own affairs. If I allowed myself to be run over like you I should never have opened my mouth at all"

In the meantime Mr Pitch made good his escape, stopping [illegible] to see if she were pursuing him

"What in the world possesses you, Ann?" gasped Mrs Temple [illegible]. "Let the poor old woman have him. How can it hurt you?"

"If you had seen as much of the world as I have Ellen Temple, you'd learn better than to allow yourself to be run over by every [illegible]. I'm a [illegible] sewing and ironing and working my fingers to the bone [illegible] all done up elegant—[illegible]"

The rest was [illegible] Miss Kensett [illegible] to mend [illegible]

Ann Kensett's Mr Pitch

Miss Kensett was a maiden lady of fifty—a brief, dark, withered little personage with a nose retrousse said nose having become so by a habit she had of turning it up at everything which did not precisely reach her own spotless ideas She loved herself first and best, her wardrobe last, totally and unconquerable wid[illegible]

Miss Kensett went up into the country to spend the summer with her married sister and there saw pass her window every day a sprightly old gentleman of three score years and ten, or perhaps, his years might have been fewer His neglected wardrobe pained her sight, her hearts yearned over the entire masculine race and she, one day persuaded her sister to call him in, with a view of benefiting his dilapidated condition Accordingly, he came, and fixing her small black eye on him, she opened the subject at once

"You live alone, Mr Pitch, I hear"

"Yes'm, granny left me a year ago this bavin', and sometimes I think I'll soon foller arter"

I should want to if I had to wear such a shirt as that—I say I should want to!' observed Miss Kensett, sharply

He was a little deaf, and did not quite understand but he ventured -

'Yes'm'

'Have you nobody to fix up your clothes, and look after you?'

My grand darter, Lucindy, lives with me but she's young, and ain't no patchin' hand'

'Well, I'm a patchin' hand I think it elegant to patch! I do like to see a nice pile of men's clothes all clean and mended up It's magnificent! If you'll bring your clothes here I'll have them washed, and then mend them with my own hands"

After Mr Pitch fully comprehended this gracious offer, he overwhelmed her with thanks and offered remuneration, to all of which she replied that to see a clean, decent-looking man in this nasty, outlandish place, would be sufficient reward And so Mr Pitch brought his 'clothes' In due process of time they were rejuvenated, and himself inclosed, after which Miss Kensett contemplated him in a sort of ecstacy

'Do look at the dear old man! Isn't he nice looking? I say—isn't he elegant—splendid? Don't his shirt look magnificent"

In the overflowing kindness of her heart she did it without a thought of exciting remark—only that every one would admire him as she did, but in this she found herself mistaken Her roguish niece invariably called [illegible] her as he passed

'Aunt Kensett, there goes your Mr Pitch"

And then gravely accused her of stealing [illegible] nature affections, all under the thin and flimsy pretext of patching'

The gentleman himself was, like all his sex extremely susceptible to kindness, and had of late acquired the habit of saying 'Your most 'bedient ma'am, till death parts Thank ye till yo'r better paid" The words were a little significant, but Miss Kensett was difficult to move; they troubled her Even when, finally, Mr Pitch [illegible] smartly by with sun flowers and [illegible] in his buttonhole, she sewed on in [illegible] consciousness, of the feelings her [illegible]

[illegible] languid August evening, Mr [illegible], evidently got up for its an [illegible]

A [illegible], aged, swallow tailed coat was [illegible] habiliments, all creased and cover[illegible] and down it was, too, where[illegible] Miss Kensett's eyes were fastened upon

"You must bring that coat here, next time and [illegible] it brushed It's a sight to behold!" she exclaimed

'Never ben teched sence granny left me, she used to air it reg'lar, thank ye kindly till ye'r better paid"

How is it with your stockings?' asked Miss Kensett disdaining the allusion to granny as she always did. "I do like to see a man with nice clean stockings on his [illegible] you must have Lucindy knit some for you"

Lucindy ain't no knittin' hand, seems to [illegible] times as if I feel the need of a pard[illegible]"

[illegible]' interrupted Miss Kensett "and [illegible] I [illegible] you had better think of some [illegible] I'll see to you while I stay, and [illegible] after that dirt will soon [illegible] they've been kept clean [illegible]"

'It's a barmy evening," was the somewhat elegant remark 'clear as a glass bottle"

'Elegant!' replied Miss Kensett, "have you got your toes through those stockings you put on the other day? If you have you'd better leave them for I'd as lief your rags should flutter from your head as your heels [illegible] rags, even if they are out of sight

'Anna" said Mr Pitch, winking at her, (he had heard her sister call her Ann, and he somehow wanted to come very near to night,) my stockin's is hull, and my shirt is hull, and my trowsers is hull, many thanks till ye're better paid! It's my vittals is the matter now,"

'My good laws! can't Lucinda cook for you?" interrupted Miss Kensett

'Lucindy ain't no cookin' hand, the little thing ain't much of a hand at anything Ye're alone in the world, Ann, and so am I I've known what it was to hev one good woman, I earnestly feel the want of another I hev pork in the cellar and pigs to kill, and its so lonesome in t'other room, now granny ain't there I have always ben reckoned a good provider If you choose tew come with me, Ann, who shall rebel agin it? We're both of age,' he concluded, with a dry chuckle

"My good laws!" exclaimed the petrified spinster

'Hev you no wish for a pardner? Do you mean to live and die single?' he meekly asked, very much fluttered and scared at her small indignant eyes

I don't think shall be yoked with Methuselah at all events! Pigs to kill! Good provider! Mercy,' mercy" muttered Miss Kensett her voice for once failing her

"Pigs to kill,' continued Mr Pitch uneasily 'and wood drug up afore the door, a bar'l of wheat flour, and plenty of Injun, and it look so lonesome in t'other room, now granny ain't there"

'Mercy! mercy!" again muttered Miss Kensett, rolling her eyes around at her pink wrapper, and passing her hand over her thinly covered [illegible]

"My good laws!"

'Sartainly," he responded in a mild conciliatory way, "you're younger than I am and spryer, and eddicateder, I s'pose but I thought it would be no harm to ax ye if ye was a mind to jine We're both alone like and Lucindy ain't no cookin' hand, and it looks so lonesome in"—

"Stop your mouth!" piped Miss Kensett, 'Don't say that again in my presence—don't you dare,' she threatened, her voice trembling

'I will jest start,' said the poor man rising, scared most out of his wits 'I had no [illegible] you were so techy I hadn't the most furtherest idea of 'fending ye I thought bein' I had pork in the cellar and pigs to kill, and Lucindy—'

'Get out of my house this instant!' fiercely interrupted Miss Kensett 'Never mind your hat' as he looked around for it, 'There it is,' jamming it on his head, 'Now clear out with your old bones, and don't you set your old boots inside [illegible] for while I'm here! I should [illegible] your funeral, you—you old [illegible] — "

By this time the discarded lover was out of hearing

But Miss Kensett was no one to fall [illegible] Winter came and the pinched face and neglected appearance of the old man softened her heart So, one [illegible] December day she called to him, [illegible] him and gave him a severe lecture on his [illegible] and after that [illegible] to him as before

'This is the [illegible] I have made for him' she remarked [illegible] 'I'm going to have them [illegible] and he'll be so pleased with them! Don't [illegible] to a neat [illegible] After all the pains I have taken with him not to have [illegible] I don't think I should have stayed in this nasty rough place this winter, only to look after him, poor nice old thing"

A while after came Mr Pitch somewhat flurried and nervous, even for him, seating himself on one chair, and then without obvious reason quitting it for another pulling off his mittens and then jerking them on again, and fidgeting about generally

'Fine February day this—exceedingly calm and spriggy,' he at length remarked

'Your shirts are all done up splendid,' observed Miss Kensett and now I am making you a few collars of the linen that was left

"You won't need them much, but they will come handy if you wanted to go to church or any of your friends should die It's my way to have things ready

'I'm more than obleeged to you Ann, and I'm willin' to pay you well if you'll only accept on't'

'I told you once that I was rewarded in seeing a clean nice looking man go by my window every day' said Miss Kensett tartly

'Well, I'm a thousand times obleeged, and I'll trouble ye no more with my duds I've come arter 'em to take 'em all home, off your hands' he said, with desperate energy

'Why, as I told you, it's no trouble I like to work for the men, they look so elegant when they are all nice and clean"

'Wall really the fact is, Ann it don't seem exactly right for you tew be doing my patchin', when there's a woman to hum doin' nothin'"

'You've been frisking and fidgeting about ever since you came, now, if you've got anything to say, out with it?' said Miss Kensett, sharply

'Really, Ann, I wouldn't hev you think, for the world, it was any onrespect to you I gave you the first chance, but we're all of us changeable, onruly forrad critters, onless we yoked in couples, and the smartest one pulls for both alike, they seem to travel more steader like, eh?"

"Ellen,' queried Miss Kensett, snapping her eyes at her sister, "can you make head or tail of what he says? He's crazy!"

Mr Pitch rose, moved his chair nearer the door, and seating his sparse mortality on the extreme edge, winked deprecatingly at the spotless maiden.

"Wall if you please, Ann, if its all the same tew you, I'll take my things

Miss Kensett brought them out on her out spread hands, her eyes resting on them lovingly, folded as they were in a marvelous way know only to herself

'They are all here except the collars I'm finishing You can drop in any time after them"

"Oh never mind Ann," was the uneasy reply "she can do it She requested me to fetch 'em all, every rag, she said tew, if there was any little pieces and such, in pertickler I was to fetch 'em'

'Mr Pitch" asked Mrs Temple, eyeing him gravely, 'what have you been doing? Not getting married surely?"

'I may as well tell on't fust as larst I s'pose I was actilly jined, I dew expect, yesterday,"

'Mercy be good to us!' exclaimed Miss Kensett, sinking into a chair.

"Who in the world is it?" queried Mrs Temple

'Yes'm it was Miss Cripp that was, she's my pardner now, stirrin' and lively as a cricket, tuck the whole consarn off my hands, out doors and in, started Lucindy and bowsed into the work all sorts, quick as we got hum Said how tuat I was to bring every rag Hope there'll be no hard feelin's Ann Allers hev set store by ye— [illegible]llers shall, but Miss Cripp is a woman—used to hev her own way—not easy tew handle like"

'I hope in my heart she'll poison you!" interrupted Miss Kensett between her set teeth 'An old Jezebel of a widow!"

"The widow Cripp that was," observed Mr Pitch, absently picking at his mitten

'Well, I know who it was,' screamed Miss Kensett 'you ungrateful old fool!—me fixing and fussing for that creature to have the benefit of! I could tear every rag off you!'

'Why Ann,' said he rising and opening the door, his eyes as big as saucers, 'I axed yu fust I had no idee of yu're taking on so'

'Take your bundle and start! Stop a minute!' said she flying at him and grabbing it She twisted the neatly ironed shirts into every possible shape, she threw them on the floor, and seated herself on them more forcibly than gracefully, and finally wadded them into a bunch and threw them at him,

Her sister expostulated and, taking the enraged maiden by the shoulder, endeavored to lead her away.

'Let me al[o]ne!' she jerked out "I can manage my own affairs If I allowed myself to be run over like you do I should never have opened my mouth at all"

In the meantime Mr Pitch made good his escape, stepping briskly away, and occasionally turning his scared eyes behind, to see if she were pursuing him.

'What in the world possesses you, Ann?' gasped Mrs Temple, wonderingly 'Let the poor old woman have him How can it hurt you?'

'If you had seen as much of the world as I have Ellen Temple you'd learn better than to allow yourself to be run over by every hussy of a widow that comes along? Me, a sewing and darning and working my fingers to the bone, all for a great hawk eyed brazen old widow I [illegible] shirts! all done up elegant—magnificent—splendid—

The rest was lost in heartfelt sobs Miss Kensett wept heavily! uncely! tremendously!—no mild shower but a general deluge
